Reported Loss Narrative

The tenant reported water dripping through the ceiling into the bedroom after a severe thunderstorm. A maintenance worker placed buckets and later removed a section of wet drywall. The property manager states the unit was "habitable except bedroom," while the tenant states the smell and ceiling collapse risk made the unit unsafe.

The tenant discarded a soaked mattress and two rugs before the adjuster inspection because of odor. Photos show the mattress but do not show brand labels or condition before the loss. The claim includes a gaming computer near the hallway leak; the repair shop found corrosion but cannot confirm whether it arose from this event.

The tenant stayed with a friend and paid $900 in cash for two weeks. The policy may reimburse reasonable additional living expense, but cash payments without receipts may be limited or denied.

Exclusions, Conditions, and Tricky Clauses

- Flood, sewer backup, seepage, groundwater, and long-term leakage are excluded unless specifically endorsed. This claim is coded as storm-created opening / roof leak, not overland flood.
- Landlord-owned building components, drywall, roof, cabinets, and standard fixtures are not covered under tenant contents coverage.
- Mold, rot, wear, deterioration, odor, vermin, and gradual damage are limited or excluded unless resulting directly from a covered sudden loss and reported promptly.
- Replacement cost is paid only after replacement; otherwise claim may be settled at actual cash value with depreciation.
- Additional living expense covers increased costs above normal living expense, not rent already owed or voluntary upgrades.

Confusing Legal / Insurance Language Excerpts

We cover direct physical loss to insured personal property caused by a covered peril, subject to the exclusions and limitations in this policy. Where water enters through an opening created suddenly by windstorm or hail, coverage may apply to resulting damage to contents, provided the opening and water entry are substantiated and the loss is not otherwise excluded.

Additional Living Expense means the necessary and reasonable increase in living expenses incurred by the insured so that the household can maintain its normal standard of living when the insured premises is unfit for occupancy due to a covered loss. We do not pay for expenses that would have been incurred regardless of the loss, including ordinary rent, ordinary meals, voluntary relocation, or convenience expenses.

The insured must protect property from further damage, keep an accurate record of repair and living expenses, and preserve damaged property for inspection. If property is discarded before inspection, payment may be based on available evidence and may be reduced or denied where the insurer's ability to determine cause, ownership, value, or repairability is prejudiced.
